

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES ON LEGAL HISTORY

A Max Planck Institute for Legal History and Legal Theory
Open Access Publication Series

How was the Council of Trent employed to address problems of ecclesiastical administration in the Brazilian empire? Going beyond a view of this normative set as rigid or as a battle flag for ultramontanists against liberals, this study dives into sources from the praxis of the Council of State (Brazil) and the Congregation of the Council (Holy See) and shows the Tridentinum as a rather plastic resource, modulated within a scenario of multilevel governance and multinormativity.

Anna Clara Lehmann Martins is a legal historian and jurist currently holding a researcher position at the Max Planck Institute for Legal History and Legal Theory (mpilht). She has a cotutelle doctoral degree in law from the Universidade Federal de Minas Gerais (UFMG) and in modern and contemporary history from the Universität Münster.
